We recognize that the city of Bloomington sits on Native land. The city as well as City administrative buildings are on the traditional homelands of the Miami, Delaware, Potawatomi, and Shawnee people, and we acknowledge they are past, present, and future caretakers of this land.

We also acknowledge that much of the economic progress and development in Indiana and specifically Bloomington resulted from the unpaid labor and forced servitude of People of Color - specifically enslaved African labor.

We acknowledge that this land remains home to and a site of gathering and healing for many indigenous and other people of color and commit to the work necessary to create and promote a more equitable and just Bloomington.

We move forward knowing and acknowledging our rich, complicated, and sometimes painful past so that we can learn from it and create a true land of opportunity.

City wins annexation lawsuit

State supreme court rules state legislation was unconstitutional

By Ernest Rollins
The Herald-Times

The Indiana Supreme Court has agreed that action taken by the Indiana Legislature stopping Bloomington's 2017 annexation attempt was unconstitutional.

In a 3-2 vote, the Indiana Supreme Court affirmed a 2019 lower court ruling on Tuesday after hearing oral arguments in the case in January. Justice Christopher Goff issued the opinion with Chief Justice Loretta Rush and Justice Steven David concurring. Justices Geoffrey Slaughter and Mark Massa dissented.

Frank Nardi, a Brown County magistrate and special judge in the case, ruled in the city's favor in April 2019 after city officials sued the state — naming Gov. Eric Holcomb as the sole defendant — with regard to a last-minute amendment to the state's 2017 budget bill that effectively stopped Bloomington's

Hamilton originally proposed annexing nearly 10,000 acres, but the process was effectively killed by an unexpected amendment to the state budget in 2017. (Chris Howell / Herald-Times file photo) annexation mid-process.

The section of public law — Indiana Code section 36-4-3-11.8 — prohibited annexation attempts started in the first half of 2017 from proceeding, and said the city cannot revisit the issue until after June 30, 2022.

Nardi viewed the state's actions as implementing special legislation without just cause and unconstitutional.

The Indiana Supreme Court agreed.

"We are gratified that the Supreme Court agreed with our position and the trial court (ruling)," Bloomington Mayor John Hamilton said.

According to court documents, Gov. Eric Holcomb
